Shouldn't They Be Together? - kaybe Back in the mid-80s, I used to work for a company that bought and sold yellow pages listings. Part of the deal was that when a listing expires, they bought the listing from us.Eventually, the company was purchased and I was transferred to a local office of a national company. The local office needed data and I was tasked with extracting the data from our system and importing into theirs. Part of the deal was that we would get all of our data at once so that we could start collecting our next batch and we could get ready for the company to purchase. It was at this point that I got their regional phone book directory for my office. After a thorough search, I found the contact for their directory office.I emailed her and said that I was the guy in charge of the directory and that she had some data that we were interested in. She said that the data needed to be in CSV format and that we would need to supply hard copies and call her when we were ready for her to send them over. Two days later, she called me and said that the directory data should be in CSV format and that she could send me a hard copy of it.I was in the process of extracting the data from the directory when my new boss told me that he wanted to terminate the deal, that we wouldn't be extending the contract. As a result, I couldn't send a hard copy to the directory office and I had no way of contacting them about providing them the data in CSV format. Several months later, the company went bankrupt and my boss was fired (and I was let go). About three years later, I sent a letter to the directory office asking for the contact 3da54e8ca3
